Afterwards It was jushlished that the negro had came to life, which announcement created considerable excitement among the people in the vicinity of the place where the

which is taken from the Worcester (Mass.) Telegram. It says: Yesterday afternoon a colored man was taken ill on the Commons, and would have fallen but for the timely assistance of two bystanders. The man had been wandering about the Commons since morning, and had been noticed on account of the peculiar way in which he carried his head. It hong toward his right shoulder, and he seemed to take no pains to pull it into the position in which people commonly earry their heads. He was respectably dress in clothes that had evidently not been made for him, and his boots looked as if he had

He had no friends and he said he was not able to work. The man seemed flurried by his faintness and weak, and the humane person who had remained by his side took him to a restaurant and saw him properly fed. It was in a burst of gratitude and confidence at being so well treated that the colored man told a tale so utterfy marvelous as to be utterably unworthy of credence wero it not corroborated by

It was sitting in the Common after be had dined that he said: "I have had trouble with my neck and been sulject to fainting spells over since I was hanged in Arkansas." The expression was startling enough to make any one think the man was crazy, but as he was eircumstantial as to details of time and place, and it is a well-known fact that a negro was legally hanged three years ago in Arkansas for assault on a white woman and afterwards recovered conscious-

The case attracted much attention at the time. As published then, the negro was suspend d for twenty minutes after the old fashioned platform gallows fell, and the body was given by the sheriff to the father of the young man, who, with some friends, was waiting near by with a wagon. It was the intention to take him to tho settlement where he formerly lived, and bury him there. This settlement was fourteen miles from the county seat, and was a lonely piece of country. When the wagon was nearly at home the father of the supposed corpse and his friends were startled by groans coming from under the tarpaulin thrown over the supposed dead man and his struggles to get from under it. As soon as they had recovered from their fright they went back to the wagon, from which they had fled, and helped the legally dead man up, gave him a drink from the omnipresent jug of whisky and took him home. Instead of leaving the settlement at to represent walking, varies somewhat. once, the hanged man stayed around It is not an unheard-of thing for them his old home, and the superstitious to struggle to the feet as early as eight colored people demanded his rearrest menths old. SHEEP MANAGEMENT.

1. The change in the fall from grass to hay and grain should be mest gradnal; if sudden growth of both body and fleece is liable to suffer a check; when the growth of the latter starts again there is a weak spot in the fiber which lup: irs its quality. Oaly a few kernals of grain should be given at first, and more gradually up to about a gill a day at the end of two weeks. Sheep are dainty and will neither cat dirty food nor drink foul water. Givo them clean bright straw rather than musty hay and straw that they seatter under foot if raked up every day will saved from waste. 2. A mixture of two-thirds oats and one-third corn has given me much better results, especially with breeding ewes, than coin a'one; on corn only, with their hay, they became feverish and very much disorded with respect to yield of milk, and condition of udders, and many lambs were lost. If hay is fed a gill of grain per day will be enough, but with slrnw twice as much should be given.

3. Sheep naturally drink a little and ften, and an ahundant supply of good clear water should be always accessible to them in their fold-one of the good uses to which a wind-mill may be put. It may be better even to give them no water and let them eat snow than to let them get very thirsly and drink large quantities of cold water at once: scours may result from such chilling of the stomach.

4. It does not pay to expose sheep to cold winds and storms, nor to force them to lie on the snow so that their wool becomes wetted, nor, on the other hand, to confine them so that they can not get exercise. Without exercise they are liable to become feverish and constipated, and to fall off in appetite -or if with young, to have stretchers, and to produce feeble lambs. With an abundant supply of roots they do better in confinement. My sheep winter in a large shed, with windows all around it to let in the simlight, with an underdrained earth floor, and ample water supply and feeding racks; every pleasant day they are turned into the barnyard for exercise.

5. Sheep should be sheared before they are turned out to grass, keeping them housed even for a month if neecold, and turning them out for as much of the day as the sun is warm, and giving them some dry food, and the lambs a little grain. Thus the ticks will be Hall at 7 o'clock. of fifth on the wool will be avoided, and the succp will be in a better condition by re son of the gradual change

CAN IT BE TRUE? The Story of a Negro's Escape From Death.

He Was Hanged in Arkansas, Bul Afterwards Turned Up Allve in Massachusells-His Own Story of U'

Experiences.

It will be remembered by many people of the State that about three years ago a negro was hanged at Lonoke, this State. Afterwards it was published that the negro had came to life, which announcement created considerable excitement among the people in the vicinity of the place where the hanging occurred. A few days ago this same negro showed up in Worcester, Mass., with a crooked neck, as will be seen by the following account. which is taken from the Worcester (Mass.) Telegram. It says:

Yesterday afternoon a colored mau was taken ill on the Commous, and would have fallen but for the timely assistance of two bystanders. The man had been wandering about the Commons since morning, and had been noticed on account of the peculiar way in which he carried his head. It hang toward his right shoulder, and he seemed to take no pains to pull it into the position in which people commonly carry their heads. He was respectably dress in clothes that had evidently not been made for him, and his boots looked as if he had walked a considerable distance

When he had been assisted to a seat he fainted, and when he regained consciousness he clutched at his throat, tore away his collar and said appealingly: "No, no! My God! Not looked about him was marked. One of the gentlemen who had assisted him to a seat left when the colored he had recovered his composure.

said, and he had never bees here before. He had walked in fron New Haven, begging shelter and food as he went, and had only got to this city in the early morning. He had no friends and he said he was not able to work. The man seemed flurried by his faintness and weak, and the humane person who had remained by his side took him to a restaurant and saw him properly fed. It was in a burst of gratitude and confidence at being so well treated that the colored maa told a tale so utterly marvelous as to be utterably unworthy of credence were it not corroborated by It was sitting in the Common after be had dined that he said: "I have had trouble with my neek and been subject to fainting spells ever since I was hanged in Arkansas."

The expression was startling enough to make any one think the man was crazy, but as he was circumstantial as to details of time and place, and it is a well-known fact that a negro was legally hanged three years ago in Arkansas for assault on a white woman and afterwards recovered conscious-

The case attracted much attention at the time. As published then, the negro was suspended fur twenty inlinutes after the old fashioned platform gallows fell, and the body was given by the sheriff to the father of the young man, who, with some friends, was waiting near by with a wagon. It was the intention to take him to the settlement where he formerly lived, and bury him there. This settlement was fourteen miles from the county seat, and was a lonely piece of country. When the wagon was nearly at home the father of the supposed corpse and his friends were startled by groans coming from under the tarpaulin thrown ever the supposed dead man and his struggles to get from under it. As soon as they had recovered from their fright they went back to the wagon, from which they had fled, and helped the legally dead man up, gave him a drink from the omniprescat jug of whisky and took him home. In-The case was taken to the Governor, and, pending discussion as to the right of the authorities to take cognizance of the existence of a coavict wanderer ever since.

much should be given. 3. Sheep naturally drink a little and fren, and an nhundant supply of good elean water should be always accessible to them in their fold-one of the good uses to which a wind-mill may be put. It may be better even to give them no water and let them eat snow than to let them get very thirsty and drink large quantities of cold water at once; seours may result from such chilling of the stomach. 4. It does not pay to expose sheep to cold winds and storius nor to force them to lie on the snow so that their wool becomes wetted, nor, on the other hand, to confine them so that they can not get excreise. Without exercise they are liable to become feverish and constipated, and to fall off in appetite -or if with young, to have stretchers, and to produce feeble lumbs. With an abundant supply of roots they do better in confinement. My sheep winter in a large shed, with windows all around it to let in the snulight, with an underdrained earth floor, and ample water supply and feeling racks; every pleasant day they are turned into the barnvard for exercise.

5. Sheep should be sheared before they are turned out to grass, keeping them housed even for a month If necessary for adequate protection from cold, and turning them out for as much of the day as the sun is warm, and giving them some dry food, and the lambs n little grain. Thus the ticks will be got rid of earlier, much accumulation of filth on the wool will be avoided, and the sheep will be in a better condition by re sin of the gradual change from dry feed to grass.

6. The old rule to feed lambs "little and often" will not do for them, though well enough for p'gs. Few people realize how mee's milk the ewe and Sunday. Pastor, Rev. I TOLD MY LOVE.

- I told my love to the evening star, It did not change its beaming; Then to the moon on its silver ear,
- She beeded not my dreamin I told my love to the fily nate.
- I might as well have told my tale To the oak, so griw, and hoary. I told my love to the crimson rose,

It put her in no fintter.

- But not a word she'd utter. I turned from them all with heavy heart, Weary of each vagary And played at last, a sober part-
- I told my love to Mary. Soon star and flower went from my ken, The sky grew strangely brighter: She whispered a little word, and then My beart at once was tighter.

It will be remembered by many people of the State that about three years ago a negro was hanged at Lonoke. this State. Afterwards it was published that the negro had came to life, which announcement created considorable excitement among the people in the vicinity of the place where the hanging occurred. A few days ago this same negro showed up in Worcester, Mass., with a crooked neek, as will be seen by the following account, which is taken from the Worcester

The man had been wandering about the White It May Be Very Usefal, It Is Cer-Conmons since morning, and had been noticed on account of the peculiar way in which he carried his head. It hing toward his right shoulder, and he seemed to take no pains to pull it into the position in which people commonly carry their heads. He was respectably dress in clothes that had evidently not been made for him, and his boots looked as if he had walked a considerable distanca.

When he had been assisted to a seat he fainted, and when he regained consciousness he elutched at his throat, tore away his collar and said appealingly: "No, no! My God! Not looked about him was marked. One of the gentlemen who had assisted him to a seat left when the colored
